

Dear Neighbor,

When I was playing baseball in high school and college and in development leagues after college in New York and Arizona I always hoped I would be on the field at Kauffman Stadium one day.

Tomorrow I will be, but not in the role I originally hoped for.

Gov. Mike Parson is conducting a ceremonial bill signing on the field at 2:30 tomorrow before the 3:10 p.m. Royals vs. Tigers game of the legislation to establish a special Negro Leagues Baseball Museum license plate to raise awareness of the museum and funds for its operation that was sponsored by Senator Barbara Anne Washington that I handled in the House.

Sen. Washington and I will both be on the field with Bob Kendrick, president of the museum, when the governor conducts the ceremonial signing and then throws out the first pitch. The official signing ceremony that Sen. Washington and I both attended took place in the governor's capitol office Monday.

The senator and I both introduced identical bills to establish the special plate, and my bill was awaiting a vote by the full Senate after passing the House 153-0 when the House approved my motion 149-0 to pass her bill which had passed the Senate earlier.

Don't forget the spring 6th Council District Neighborhood Cleanup in about three weeks that will be from 8 a.m. to noon

Saturday, June 12, with drop-off sites in the east parking lot at Ruskin High School, 7000 E. 111th St., and the parking lot of South-Broadland Presbyterian Church, 7850 Holmes Rd.

Both sites will accept bulky items such as old furniture, leaves & brush, tires (with or without rims) and trash and provide document shredding, all at no charge. The Ruskin site also will accept electronics for a charge. The amounts for various electronic items are listed on the attached flyer.

Email is probably the best way to reach my office. If you are unable to quickly reach me, my legislative aide, Kaylee Bauer is ready to help you.

Please scroll down to read about other state government matters and important upcoming local events.

Feel free to forward this newsletter to your friends and family who might want to know the latest news about what is happening in state government and about important local events. Be safe and God bless!

Yours in Service,
Mark A. Sharp

Legislation to establish a special Negro Leagues Baseball Museum license plate to raise awareness of the museum and funds for its operation sponsored by Senator Barbara Anne Washington and handled in the House by Representative Mark A. Sharp who introduced identical legislation was signed into law Monday by Governor Mike Parson in his capitol office as Senator Washington and Representative Sharp happily watch.

WEEKLY CAPITOL UPDATE

SPECIAL SESSION NEEDED TO RENEW TAX

The General Assembly's failure during the 2021 regular legislative session to reauthorize a key funding mechanism for Missouri's Medicaid program means the governor must call a special session in the coming months for lawmakers to renew the tax.

If such legislation isn't passed by Sep. 30 when the tax expires, the state's Medicaid program is expected to run out of funds to serve existing recipients before the end of the current fiscal year.

Senate Bill 43 sought to reauthorize a special tax on hospitals and other health care providers known as the federal reimbursement allowance (FRA) that helps Missouri leverage billions of dollars in additional federal Medicaid funding.

Although renewal bills typically pass without much controversy, this year's effort derailed in April when a senator successfully attached an amendment seeking to prevent coverage of certain types of birth control. Subsequent efforts to pass the renewal language in other bills were blocked by members of the Senate Conservative Caucus, who started insisting on adding unrelated anti-abortion language.

The fight over renewing the FRA is separate from the legislature's refusal to fund a constitutionally mandated expansion of the Medicaid program to cover additional low income non-insured Missourians that is to take effect on July 1.

After the General Assembly failed to provide funding for expansion, Gov. Mike Parson withdrew his administration's plans to expand Medicaid coverage on July 1 as constitutionally required.

Attorneys representing three women with chronic health conditions who would qualify for Medicaid when its coverage is expanded to cover more low income Missourians as constitutionally required filed suit yesterday against the Missouri Department of Social Services seeking the court to order the department to begin enrolling newly eligible persons effective July 1.

BILL SEEKS TO NULLIFY FEDERAL GUN LAWS

On the last day of the 2021 regular legislative session, the House of Representatives voted 111-42 to pass legislation I oppose that purports to declare certain federal gun laws unenforceable in Missouri while also empowering offenders to extract hefty civil fines from local law enforcement agencies that assist federal agents in investigating such gun crimes.

The Senate voted 22-10 in favor of the bill a day earlier, so it is now awaiting the signature of the governor, who supported similar legislation as a state lawmaker.

Under House Bill 85, federal gun offenders could sue any local law enforcement agency whose officers assisted in their arrests for certain gun crimes. Those agencies would be subject to a minimum $50,000 civil fine per occurrence, with the money going to the offender, who also would be entitled to attorney fees.

Another main provision of the bill unconstitutionally attempts to nullify federal laws relating to the taxation, registration or tracking of firearms, and laws prohibiting the possession, ownership, use or transfer of specific types of firearms.

Nullification is a discredited 19th century doctrine asserting that individual states can reject federal laws they don't like. The U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly ruled states have no such authority, describing nullification in the 1958 case Cooper v. Aaron as the “illegal defiance of constitutional authority.”

Lawmakers approved similar nullification legislation in 2013, but then-Gov. Jay Nixon vetoed it. Although the House voted to override, the effort fell one vote short in the Senate.

FUNDING CAP FOR SCHOLARSHIPS REDUCED

One week after the General Assembly passed legislation to establish tax-supported scholarships for private K-12 school tuition, lawmakers passed a second bill to significantly reduce the amount of tax breaks available for the program.

Passage of the follow-up bill was part of a deal to secure Senate passage of the first measure. Both bills await action by the governor.

House Bill 349, which won final passage on May 6, would have initially authorized up to $50 million a year in tax credits for the scholarships, an amount that later could be adjusted for inflation until it reached a cap of $75 million annually. However, lawmakers then approved Senate Bill 86, which contains a superseding provision limiting the credits to $25 million a year to start, with a subsequent $50 million annual cap. I voted against both bills.

The program would allow people to donate to private organizations that in turn would provide qualifying students with partial scholarships for private school tuition. Since donors would receive a tax credit for the full amount of their contributions, they would end up getting back all of their money.

However, the amount of tax revenue the state collects for public education and other services would be reduced.

IMMUNITY FROM LAWSUITS SENT TO GOVERNOR

In the waning hours of the 2021 regular legislative session, the House of Representatives voted 97-57 to grant final approval to a bill providing businesses, health care providers, nursing homes and religious institutions with blanket immunity from most lawsuits related to COVID-19 exposure.

I voted against the bill since I thought the immunity being granted was too broad.

The bill was a top priority of Gov. Mike Parson who in January asked lawmakers to make it the first bill sent to him this year after they didn't pass similar legislation in 2020.

Despite winning Senate passage in February, Senate Bill 51 languished in the House for more than two months until April 26 when, in an unexpected move, a House committee voted to reject it. The committee later reversed its action but kept the bill tied up until the second-to-last day of session.

Business groups began seeking COVID-19 liability protections almost immediately after the pandemic began more than a year ago. Lawmakers declined to do so during the 2020 regular legislative session last spring and again during a December special session.

To date, it doesn't appear any lawsuits have been filed in Missouri relating to COVID-19 exposure.

MEDICAL MARIJUANA INFO MUST BE DISCLOSED

The Missouri Court of Appeals Western District ruled on May 18 that the Missouri Department of Health and Senior Services must disclose records relating to successful applicants for medical marijuana licenses in appeal proceedings by unsuccessful applicants. The decision upholds a trial judge's ruling against the department.

The department claimed that a provision of the Missouri Constitution authorizing marijuana production and sales for medical purposes prohibits it from disclosing any information about applicants, even as part of the discovery process during legal proceedings.

However, the three-judge appellate panel concluded the constitution says the exact opposite and expressly allows for such information to be used during the license appeals process. The court said to hold otherwise would produce an “unreasonable and absurd result”.

The department has faced relentless criticism over its implementation of medical marijuana, which Missouri voters authorized in 2018, and thousands of appeals from rejected applicants are pending before the Administrative Hearing Commission.

The agency has been accused of using a secretive and arbitrary approval process.

It could still appeal the case to the Missouri Supreme Court.

TAX COLLECTION ON INTERNET SALES PASSES

On final votes of 25-4 in the Senate and 145-6-1 in the House of Representatives, lawmakers approved legislation on May 14 that will enable local governments and the state to more easily collect sales taxes from out-of-state online vendors.

The legislation also authorizes future cuts to state income taxes if certain revenue collection thresholds are triggered and creates a state-level earned income tax credit to benefit working Missourians.

Supporters have pushed for the online sales tax provision for years, saying it’s necessary to level the playing field between businesses that sell items from physical facilities in Missouri that have always collected sales taxes and out-of-state online vendors that usually don’t, even though such taxes have always been due under state law.

Missouri is the last state in the nation to enact such legislation.

JUDGE ORDERS COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

A Cole County judge ruled on May 10 that Gov. Mike Parson’s administration violated the constitutional rights of state employees to collectively bargain when it stopped adhering to valid labor contracts after the 2018 passage of legislation eliminating basic workplace protections for government workers.

The judge also ordered the administration to begin good-faith negotiations on new contracts with unions representing state employees.

The 2018 law which was passed before I took office, Senate Bill 1007, jettisoned the state's merit system, which decades ago ended political patronage in government hiring. It made most state workers "at-will" employees who "may be discharged for no reason or any reason not prohibited by law."

After the law took effect, the Parson administration stopped following the terms of labor contracts then in place with three unions representing employees in multiple bargaining units at several state agencies.

In his ruling, Cole County Circuit Judge Jon Beetem said nothing in SB 1007 says it supersedes negotiated labor agreements and interpreting the law that way would render it in violation of Article I, Section 29 of the Missouri Constitution, which guarantees the rights of workers to collectively bargain.

Beetem said he ruled in favor of plaintiffs "because SB 1007 does not restrict collective bargaining, and Defendants have violated Article I, Section 29 by acting as if it did – by repudiating labor agreements while they were in effect, refusing to process grievances, unilaterally changing terms of employment, and refusing to bargain in good faith over just cause protections, seniority as a factor in employment decisions, and grievance/arbitration procedures."

Although most of the labor contracts in question expired at the end of 2018, they all contained "evergreen" provisions stating that their terms remain in effect while new contracts are negotiated. Beetem ordered the administration to negotiate with state employee unions over new contracts "without any constraint from SB 1007" and "without unilaterally modifying the existing terms and conditions of employment during such bargaining.”

The Parson administration is expected to appeal.
