

Dear Neighbor,

Now that the ceremonial pleasantries are over that included the swearing-in ceremony and the legislative ball, legislative work will officially begin this week.

This week one of the first orders of business will be to consider changes to the House rules. Before proposed House rules changes can be debated by the full House, the Consent and House Procedure Committee will meet beginning at 1 p.m. Monday, January 9, to hear House Resolution 11, containing proposed changes sponsored by Majority Floor Leader Jon Patterson from Lee Summit.

The proposed measure will then sit on the House calendar for one day, which is required so that the House can debate House Resolution 11 on Wednesday.

House Resolution 11 includes several changes:

- Combining the previously separate committees of Crime Prevention and Public Safety into a single Crime Prevention and Public Safety Committee;
- Renaming Downsizing State Government as Government Efficiency and Downsizing;
- Creating a new Healthcare Reform Committee to hear bills "relating to improving the efficiency and cost of healthcare services";
- Renaming Insurance as Insurance Policy;
- Establishing a third Rules Committee Rules-Regulatory Oversight;
- Separating Transportation into two committees, with Transportation Accountability overseeing most matters relating to MoDOT, while Transportation Infrastructure handles bills pertaining to highways and multimodal transportation;
- Renaming Workforce Development as Workforce and Infrastructure Development;
- Changing Rule 87 to reduce the amount of time members may speak during initial debate on a bill from the traditional 15 minutes to just 10 minutes;
- Changing Rule 49 (2) to allow no more than three amendments to an underlying amendment;
- Changing Rule 30 (2) to authorize committee chairs to require that amendments be distributed 24-hours prior to a hearing; and Adding a new subsection to Rule 39 (1) that, effective July 1, 2023, will limit members to filing no more than 20 bills per legislative session, without permission of the Speaker of the House.

WEEKLY CAPITOL UPDATE Monday, January 9, 2023

MORE TAX CUTS POSSIBLE

Days after a major income tax cut took effect, new House Speaker Dean Plocher said the General Assembly should consider additional tax cuts during the 2023 legislative session which got underway Jan. 4.

Plocher, R-Des Peres, didn't specify what tax cuts should be considered, saying the legislature should look at all aspects of the state's tax structure.

One idea floated by some Senate Republicans calls for completely eliminating personal property taxes, such as the taxes on vehicles. However, doing so would significantly reduce tax collections for school districts and other local governments and likely face strong opposition.

At the start of the new year, legislation that was passed last year immediately dropping Missouri's main individual income tax rate from 5.3% to 4.8% kicked in, with additional reductions scheduled that will further reduce the rate to 4.5% dependent on net general revenue growth hitting established benchmarks.

Proponents of the tax cuts believe they will encourage more businesses to expand and locate in Missouri, while also attracting and retaining more residents, which will increase overall state income tax revenue despite lower tax rates.

Critics worry that the tax cuts will jeopardize the state's ability to adequately fund essential state services, many of which such as state aid to public education already are severely underfunded, if the hoped for economic growth doesn't occur.

Missouri currently has a $6 billion revenue surplus due in large part to federal pandemic relief and other new and expanded federal aid programs that is not predicted to last long. Lawmakers are expected to use much of the surplus to fund vital infrastructure improvements throughout the state and other critical needs. .

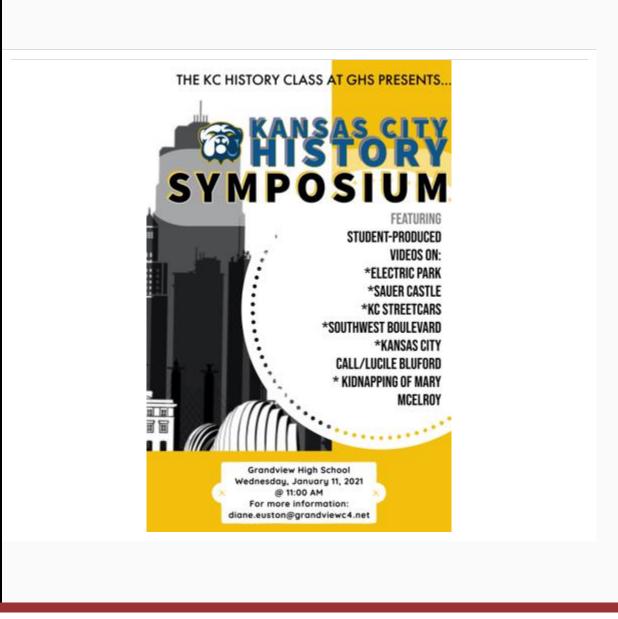

BAILEY SWORN-IN AS MO ATTORNEY GENERAL

Andrew Bailey was sworn-in on Jan. 3 as Missouri's 44th attorney general following his appointment to the position by Gov. Mike Parson. He replaces fellow Republican Eric Schmitt who resigned after being elected to the U.S. Senate in November.

He will serve out the remainder of Schmitt's term, which ends in January 2025, and has said he plans to seek election to a full four-year term in 2024.

Bailey, 41, has never previously held elected office. He has worked as an attorney in Gov. Parson's office since 2019, including serving most recently as the governor's general counsel. Before coming to the governor's office he was the general counsel for the Missouri Department of Corrections. Earlier in his career he served as an assistant Missouri attorney general and worked as an assistant prosecutor in Warren County, Mo.

Bailey received his law degree from the University of Missouri School of Law in Columbia.
