

Dear Neighbor,

Governor Mike Kehoe's proposal to help keep the Kansas City Chiefs and Royals in Missouri through state-supported stadium funding gained strong bipartisan backing in the House but faced procedural delays in the Senate that killed it for now.

Designed to respond quickly to competitive offers from Kansas, the plan aimed to ensure Missouri remains home to two of its most iconic sports franchises.

The proposal emerged in the final days of the 2025 legislative session and was added as an amendment to a bill already under consideration, giving lawmakers an opportunity to act swiftly on an urgent issue if they chose to do so.

It would have committed the state to fund up to half the cost of new or upgraded stadiums for Major League Baseball and National Football League teams, using existing tax revenues generated by the teams themselves to repay the investment. The plan included a provision requiring teams to repay public funds if they later relocated out of state.

While the process drew criticism for its last minute introduction, the substance of the proposal reflected a proactive and responsible approach to economic development. By offering a state-level solution after local voters in Jackson County rejected a stadium tax and Kansas moved aggressively to attract the teams, Missouri's new governor and bipartisan legislative supporters signaled their willingness to compete and invest in our communities. The plan also allowed flexibility for future projects beyond Kansas City, potentially benefiting other regions like St. Louis.

Though the bill was set aside in the Senate following extended debate, the strong support in the House underscores the urgency many lawmakers feel to retain the Chiefs and Royals. The conversation is far from over, and with continued public engagement, a refined and more detailed version of the plan could return in a special session of the General Assembly this summer. I strongly support the concept of this approach!

This week, the Missouri General Assembly took a meaningful step toward promoting inclusivity and respect in our schools.

On May 12, lawmakers gave final approval to the Creating a Respectful and Open World for Natural Hair (CROWN) Act, sending it to the governor's desk with broad bipartisan support. The bill passed the House 117-11, following a 32-1 vote in the Senate. The CROWN Act prohibits discrimination in K-12 public and private schools that receive taxpayer funding based on a student's natural hair texture or protected hairstyles - when those styles are commonly associated with a particular race or ethnic origin.

Every student deserves to feel safe, accepted and respected at school! By passing this legislation, Missouri is affirming that students should not be treated differently or unfairly simply because of how they wear their hair. I'm proud to support this effort to foster a more respectful and inclusive environment for all of our children.

On May 14 the Missouri Senate approved House Joint Resolution 73, a proposed constitutional amendment that would repeal abortion rights and reenact a broad statewide ban on abortions.

It passed 21-11 after Republican leaders ended a Democratic filibuster. The House had passed the measure weeks earlier.

If approved by voters, HJR 73 will erase Amendment 3 passed just last November by Missouri voters which protects abortion access up to fetal viability.

The new amendment allows abortion only in narrow cases of rape, incest (up to 12 weeks) or vague "medical emergencies". It also will eliminate constitutional protections for contraception and other reproductive care.

Despite the sweeping changes, the ballot language omits any mention of repealing Amendment 3 and instead claims it would guarantee emergency care that's already protected.

It also includes unrelated language banning gender-affirming care for minors - a move critics call "ballot candy" to sway voters to support it.

Unless the governor sets an earlier date, Missourians will vote on the amendment in November 2026. Legal challenges to the ballot wording are expected.

Also on May 14, the Missouri Senate passed legislation to repeal the state's new earned sick leave law, overriding weeks of Democratic opposition. The bill, HB 567, passed 22-11 after Senate leaders cut off debate. The House approved the repeal earlier in March.

The law, which took effect May 1 following voter approval of Proposition A last November, requires most private employers to provide one hour of sick leave for every 30 hours worked. It also includes penalties for violations. HB 567 repeals these sick leave requirements effective August 28 but will not affect the minimum wage increases voters approved, including the scheduled rise to $15 an hour next year.

Since nearly four months of sick leave will have been accrued by workers by the time HB 567 takes effect, questions remain about how businesses will handle that accumulated leave.

Governor Kehoe is widely expected to sign the repeal into law.
